Gimbel, Gifted Intellectual Of Vast Cultural Knowledge, Was Great Original; Off-Beat, One-Of-A-Kind Retailer, Unbound By Convention

Frederic A. Gimbel, former president of Gimbel's department store in New York, died at his home in Pacific Palisades, California. He was seventy-three years old. He had been ill for a number of years according to his personal physician, Dr. Rex Kennamer, says the New York Times. Frederic A. Gimbel spent his entire business career with Gimbel Brothers, Inc., and its associated stores.

He served with the company from 1913 to 1947, much of this time as vice-president. He retired in 1947 after eight years as executive head of Gimbel's 33d Street store. He previously headed the now defunct Saks 34th Street.

Mr. Gimbel was noted for his interest in art, literature, and other cultural affairs, and his efforts to popularize them through department stores.

During the early nineteen-forties he arranged for sales and displays of a number of art collections at the Gimbel's and Saks stores. These included the sale of a major part of the vast collection of William Randolph Hearst, the newspaper and magazine publisher.

Mr. Gimbel was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on September 19, 1892. His father was Isaac Gimbel, a founder of Gimbel Brothers, and his mother was Mrs. Rachel F. Gimbel.

After attending the William Penn Charter School and Phillips Andover Academy, he was graduated from Yale University in 1913. He joined Gimbel Brothers the same year and served it in various capacities for 34 years thereafter except for a period that he spent in the Navy in World War I.

Mr. Gimbel was associated with the management of Gimbel's Thirty-third Street store when he joined the management of Saks & Co. at Saks Fifth Avenue and Saks 34th Street, later becoming head of Saks. In 1934 he resigned because of ill health, says the New York Times. He returned to Saks Fifth Avenue in 1936 to assist in its operating and financial management.

Mr. Gimbel was appointed managing head in sole charge of Gimbel's 33d Street store in 1939. During his regime there the store's volume quadrupled. When many items were scarce because of World War II, he managed to unearth much-wanted merchandise like nylon stockings, sheets, and scotch whisky and put it on sale.

Early in 1947 Mr. Gimbel took a six-month leave of absence and traveled in the West and Hawaii. On his return he decided to retire from active business.

An associate of Mr. Gimbel's described him as follows:

"He was an off-beat one-of-a-kind retailer. He cared little for precedent. He looked and talked like a large, easy-going, sleepy-eyed Middle West farmer as he moseyed through the store.

"But Fred Gimbel was anything but sleepy. He had a sharp intelligence that chopped through retailing's clichés and red tape. He was never bound by convention. He was an intellectual with a vast cultural knowledge of places and people and things, acquired through many years of travel."

After retiring from the Gimbel organization in 1947, Mr. Gimbel spent the next three years in traveling. He established residence in Mexico in 1950, and lived in Mexico City, Acapulco, and Cuernavaca. In 1957, he returned to the United States to live in Los Angeles.

At the time of his connection with the New York store Mr. Gimbel was co-owner with his brother, Bernard F. Gimbel. When he retired, he was said to have disposed of most of his stock in the company, says the New York Times. Mr. Gimbel is survived by his brother, Bernard, and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Bernard Gimbel.

Work Of Retiring Nuclear Physicist Led To Atom Bomb

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, who retired at the end of last month as director of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, hopes to write a history of twentieth-century physics. In an interview reported in the June 27th issue of Newsweek magazine, says the New York Times, the sixty-two-year-old physicist ruled out writing his memoirs. "In any case," he added, "I am giving a hideously complete archive dating back to 1943 to the Library of Congress, if anyone cares to look at it."

Dr. Oppenheimer also said he believed there was "something cooking" in the way of a great scientific breakthrough in physics.

"I do not know how far off it is," he said. "It may be only years, not decades. There are many pieces of information around that don't add up."

On the subject of nuclear disarmament, he said he believed progress could be made toward it if the countries with nuclear arms got rid of them.

"This will affect how the nuclear have-nots act," he said. "They may not try to fight their way into the nuclear club if we voluntarily come out."

The magazine also said that Dr. Oppenheimer's friends "know that he has been seriously ill."

It said that the physicist explained his carrying a cane when he received an honorary degree at Princeton earlier last month with the comment, "I only need this to remind myself not to fall."

During World War II Dr. Oppenheimer was largely responsible for the work at Los Alamos that led to the development of the atom bomb.

From 1947 to 1952 he headed the Atomic Energy's Commission's advisory committee, but he was refused a Government security clearance after a loyalty hearing in 1954, says the New York Times. He has been director of the institute at Princeton since 1947, and will continue as senior professor of theoretical physics at the university after his retirement.

Was Lawyer, Judge, Accountant, Singer, Consul, U. N. Aide, Major, Lived A Life

Dr. Arnón Roy Rojansky, an Israeli lawyer and accountant who was formerly an opera singer, a judge, and a United Nations aide, died of a heart ailment in Tel Aviv. He was sixty-four years old. Dr. Rojansky was the senior partner of the chartered accounting firm of Rojansky, Sterns & Co., which has offices in Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, and Haifa, says the New York Times. He founded the company before World War II.

He was also director of the Israeli office of the New York law firm of Bernstein, Seawell & Kaplan.

Dr. Rojansky was born in Russia. He went to Palestine as a boy and was graduated from the Herzlia Gymnasium in Tel Aviv. In his early twenties he studied in Berlin for an operatic career. He sang tenor leads with a Palestinian opera company and made recordings in the early 1930's.

He then became a lawyer and an accountant serving as a magistrate and judge under the British mandate of Palestine.

At the start of World War II, Dr. Rojansky came to New York. He graduated from the Brooklyn Law School and was admitted to the New York State bar. He also became a certified public accountant.

After the war, he became a field examiner, with the rank of major, for the United Nations Rehabilitation Administration, stationed in Egypt.

Dr. Rojansky returned to permanent residence in Israel in 1952. He was president of the Israel Association for the United Nations and represented his country in international conventions of the United Nations Association in New York, New Delhi, and Geneva.

At his death, he was the consul of Uruguay in Israel. He had been the Yugoslav consul in Palestine.

In 1964, the Netherlands made him a commander in the Order Van Oranje-Nassau for his effort in promoting that country's commerce with Israel. Italy honored him the following year for similar efforts, says the New York Times. He was president for many years of the Commercial and Industrial Club of Tel Aviv.

He held the degree of Doctor of Laws.

Dr. Rojansky leaves his wife, Mrs. Edith Rojansky; a son, Marnir, of Brooklyn; and a daughter, Mrs. Dalia David, of Bloomfield, N. J., of his first marriage, to the former Miss Claire Green, who died in 1953. He is also survived by a sister, Mrs. Sonia Rogofsky, of Tel Aviv; and three grandsons.

KING FAISAL, GUILTY OF CRITICAL REMARKS ABOUT JEWS, IS PERSONA NON GRATA IN NEW YORK CITY AND STATE DESPITE INTERCESSION BY U. S. SECRETARY OF STATE

When the King of Saudi Arabia arrived at New York and was snubbed by Mayor Lindsay, the latter had also cancelled a dinner in honor of King Faisal after the King had told a Washington news conference: "Jews support Israel, and we consider those who provide assistance to our enemies as our own enemies."

The Mayor also ordered that no city officials welcome the King when he landed at La Guardia Airport, reports Maurice Carroll, in the New York Times. Soon after the Mayor cancelled the dinner, which had been scheduled in a colorful patio of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Governor Rockefeller cancelled an appointment he had with the King.

The patio, built in the early 1500's in the Spanish village of Velez Blanco, was brought stone by stone to the United States in the early 1900's, and in 1945 was donated to the Museum by George Blumenthal, a former Museum president. In 1955, Museum officials began rebuilding it as a forecourt to a new library. In 1964, it was opened to the public.

The Governor's brother, David, president of the Chase Manhattan Bank, was host later to the King at lunch at the Rockefeller Estate in Tarrytown, N.Y.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk attempted to persuade Mayor Lindsay not to cancel his reception for King Faisal of Saudi Arabia, reliable sources said. In a telephone conversation shortly after midnight between the Mayor and the Secretary, Mr. Rusk suggested Mr. Lindsay go ahead with the reception, but include in his speech of welcome a discreet expression of his dissent from King Faisal's critical remarks about Jews.

Mayor Lindsay had been reported as noncommital about what he would do. Later, after he had come to Washington to testify before a Senate subcommittee on the poverty program, he telephoned Secretary Rusk to tell him he had decided to cancel the reception.

Both the White House and the State Department declined to comment on Mayor Lindsay's and Governor Rockefeller's action in withdrawing their invitations to the Saudi monarch, says the New York Times. The State Department spokesman, Robert J. McCloskey, said only that "the dinner is Mayor Lindsay's dinner; the decision not to hold it is the Mayor's decision."

Privately, officials voiced chagrin at the cancellations, which they viewed as an affront not only to King Faisal but also, since he is a guest of the President during his visit, to Mr. Johnson as well.

As for the United States, which frequently has trouble convincing the Arabs that its policy in the Middle East has to be conditioned by domestic political factors, the furor in New York is likely to provide a strong arguing point.

Eight major Jewish organizations that make up the National Community Relations Advisory Council issued a statement at the Council's annual meeting condemning King Faisal's remarks.

The Israel Embassy refused to comment on any aspect of the situation.

A state visitor in New York as well as in Washington, is the guest of the President for the whole time, and the arrangements for the stay in New York were made by the State Department, in consultation with New York officials.

But it is generally conceded that, as one diplomatic expert put it, "responsibility ends where power ends." Although in some matters — such as the King's security — the Federal Government has overriding power and responsibility, the constitutional relationship between the Government and the states does not allow for Federal control over the political manners of state and city officials.

For King Faisal, neither New York City nor its occasional penchant for conducting a foreign policy independent of the nation's was a new experience.

The King had led his nation's delegations to the United Nations in 1947 and 1952 when his brother Saud was king. It was Saud who fell victim to the city's globally oriented politics, says the New York Times. During the election year of 1957, Mayor Robert F. Wagner barred any official welcome or reception when he came there.

The 1957 incident irritated the Eisenhower administration and bruised feelings all around. This recent affair did not seem to cause that much bother. Neither the snubbed guest nor the host who snubbed him appeared greatly concerned.

Rabbi Edward T. Sandrow, president of the New York Board of Rabbis, which represents 900 Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform rabbis, wired the Mayor: "New York Jewry congratulates you on your just and courageous stand in cancelling Faisal dinner. Any honor paid to him would have been an insult not only to New York Jewry but also to right-thinking Americans of every faith."

Arab groups condemned the Mayor for cancelling the dinner. Kadri Gharib El Araby, editorial board chairman of the seven thousand-member organization of Arab Students in the U.S.A. and Canada, said Mr. Lindsay had "succumbed to Zionist pressure."

His decision stemmed, the Mayor said, from the King's "unfortunate comment that those who are friends and supporters of Israel are therefore enemies of his country." Mr. Lindsay said that, as Mayor, he had an obligation to prevent "abrasive divisions within our city."

Someone asked if the decision had been prompted by the flood of telegrams and telephone calls protesting the King's comments in Washington. No, said the Mayor, that had not influenced him at all.

Thomas Davis, eastern regional public relations director of the John Birch Society, said the Mayor's action was "an extreme thing," and added: "It seems to me the effective power of the Anti-Defamation League is almost incalculable," says the New York Times. In a speech on the Senate floor, N.Y. Senator Jacob K. Javits said: "In welcoming foreign visitors to the United States, we have the right to hope that such visits will bolster efforts to secure the peace rather than threaten them." He added that the cancellation was the "only feasible reaction" to the King's statements a day earlier.

At the United Nations luncheon, King Faisal spoke for about seven minutes with Arthur Goldberg, the United States' representative. "It was a very pleasant luncheon," Mr. Goldberg said later. "I discussed his visit to our capital and the President. He was very pleased."

Aides to Governor Rockefeller, announcing the cancellation of the Governor's appointment with the King, said:

"Our visitors should be willing to treat all citizens of this country, which has been dedicated since its beginning to the ideals of religious tolerance and the brotherhood of man, with equal courtesy."

The political noise eventually lured some pickets — ten youngsters from a Zionist group who showed up outside the Waldorf-Astoria, where the King's party was staying. A little later, there was a fist fight between two adults. One man yelled at another, "Arab-lover." Both started swinging. It took nine policemen to pull them apart.

It all started with a press conference question in Washington. It became embroiled in New York City's complicated politics. It was talked over during a long, late dinner at Sardi's.

And it turned into a public uproar soon after Mayor Lindsay picked up a telephone at the National Airport in Washington and called his press secretary, Woody Klein, at City Hall, to tell him that he wanted the dinner cancelled, says the New York Times. Typical hosts to King Faisal were: Trans World Airlines; the Arabian American Oil Company (Aramco); the First National City Bank; the Chase Manhattan Bank; the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company; the Council on Foreign Relations; and the like.

For an agency that specializes in the thoughtful gesture and the small but knowing kindness, the Department of Public Events was thrown out of character when the smile it had prepared for the King of Saudi Arabia was ordered changed to a scowl, writes McCandlish Phillips, in the New York Times. Normally, the department will do anything to assure the well-being, comfort and felicity of a visitor. Be he a monarch, a vice consul, a student, or even a minor magnate from Kansas City, Missouri, there is practically nothing that the department regards as too much for it to do.

Nothing was exactly what it did for King Faisal.

The foreign policy of New York City is made by Mayor Lindsay. John Shove (Bud) Palmer, the Commissioner of Public Events, merely carries it out. Instead of acting as a smoother of the way for King Faisal, Mr. Palmer acted as if the King wasn't even there.

The department had sent out about 110 gold-embossed invitations to an evening dinner for the King at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. But then the King made his remark that a friend of Israel was an enemy of Saudi Arabia, and Mayor Lindsay abruptly cancelled the dinner.

The department was forced to mobilize its staff to tell the King's party of the change of plans, the caterer not to cater it, the guests not to come, the Metropolitan not to expect anybody, and the airline that had agreed to pay for it — Trans World Airlines — to close its checkbook.

The small dinner in the Spanish Renaissance setting of the Blumenthal Patio at the museum would have typified the changes that Mr. Palmer and the Lindsay administration have made in the city's way of greeting official guests, says the New York Times. The Palmer-Lindsay method — when it is not turned off — is warm and intimate and personal, rather than massive.

The visitor is not treated as the central figure in some gigantic pageant, but as a person of very individual taste, preferences, and pleasures. Protocol has practically been thrown out of the window. Reception guests are no longer selected by what Louis Olshan, of the executive staff, described as "an agency list" of important citizens.

The department asks the Government of the visitor to supply a list of guests the visitor would like to meet or his Government would wish honored by an invitation.

Then it seeks to discover areas of special interest to the visitor — perhaps engineering or medicine or education or the theater. If it should be the latter, a producer, a director, and several prominent actors would be invited to a small dinner for the visitor.

New York's official boycott of King Faisal was front page news in Israel but there was evidence that the incident had created much of a stir among Israelis.

Newspaper editorial comment welcomed the boycott. The left wing Al Hamishmar said that although the King's statement would not shake the earth, it was well to make people think about the nature of Arab hostility to Israel.

There was a tendency in Israel to shrug off King Faisal's description of Israel as "our enemies" as something from Arab sources.

The Jordanian radio, in a program devoted to a review of the Jordanian press, indicated that all shades of opinion had been aired, says the New York Times. The program headlined this item: "Faisal meets double-faced America."

The Metamorphosis Of Ben Levy

By Ursel Elizabeth Kacev, in Jewish Affairs

When Ben Levy came out from the Old Country, he had troubles. He could not speak the language, he had no money, no trade, and he had a wife and three kids.

But South Africa is not only a land of sunshine, it is also a land of opportunity. And Ben Levy found his opportunity the day that his father-in-law, Mendel, died and left him the sole heir to his worldly goods. It is true that in the eyes of a Rockefeller, that wasn't very much, but to Ben Levy, it was a chance.

The old man, Mendel, left Ben a horse and cart and a stock of fruit. In itself, it seems very little, for a horse and cart and fruit is, after all, only that and not much more. To Ben, however, it was a great deal. It was a business. And with this business went a way of life, and all of this Ben Levy inherited from old Mendel, his father-in-law.

So after prayers had been said and the week of mourning had passed, Ben set out to make his fortune. Nu, a fortune he did not make... they just don't lie around for the asking. But a living? Well, in time, he made a living. And so he carried on for some years. Up at 5 in the morning, off to Market to buy fruit and vegetables, and then a long, weary day on the road, trying to sell the stuff.

Some days the sun beat hot on his back, and it was miserable and sticky. Flies settled on the vegetables and bees buzzed maddeningly around the ripe fruit. It was frequently after one of these days, feeling depressed and weary, that he brought surplus stock back home. In the small backyard of his semi-detached house, he packed away boxes of tomatoes and crates with bananas, to ripen. There were sacks of potatoes which he had bought on the market when the price was low, so that he could make a better profit.

There were days when the rain pelted down unmercifully and thunder and lightning flashed dangerously across the sky. Then he would pull up on the side of the road and cover the old white horse, Molly, and he himself would shelter under the canvas screening the fruit. Those were the days when business was bad and he'd look up at the sky, questioning the Almighty wisdom.

But on the whole, life was not too bad and somehow he managed. They ate, they slept, and the children were healthy, thank God! and they grew bigger and he and Beckie grew older. There was only one thing that was not quite right, about this trade . . . his relationship with God. .

In the old days, when he had not done a regular day's work, he had gone to Shul every Friday night and Saturday morning, and somehow, he had felt better for it. This Shul going routine had had many facets.

Firstly, he had been doing the correct thing, the right thing that every Jew was supposed to do, and that had made him feel good. It gave him a feeling of superiority and well-being, especially when he had walked past Issy Cohen's huge emporium and had seen that it was open on the Sabbath.

There was no doubt, Issy Cohen was a very rich man, who gave a great deal to charity and the Shul, but... should that business really have been open on a Saturday?

His righteousness also served as a platform for other things. It kept Beckie in her place, for she knew only too well the duties of a Jew and therefore those of a wife. And above all, his principles procured for him the respect of the community. But deep down, there was yet another side to this craving for this religious ritual. It served as a social outing.

Here he met Hymie, Jack, Reuben, Sam and Abe... in fact, the boys! Some of them he had known in the Old Country as far back as Cheder days. Here, when prayers were done, they chatted about life and death, about the futility of war and the righteousness of the cause of the oppressed. Here they discussed Sunday night's game of "Klabias", and the rise and fall of the stock market. There were days when they calculated their winnings and losses had they but invested. Of course, one or two did in fact, invest, but they were a set apart and not of the clique.

They lamented the passing of some old member of their community, and wondered philosophically, if the wife was capable of running his business. Sometimes they had a little glass of wine and a little something to eat with it, and this was not unpleasant. Afterwards, they rested, for after all, it was the Sabbath, and on the "Sabbath thou shalt not work." In short, they kept in touch. And all this Ben Levy had given up to carry on the business when the old man, his father-in-law, had died.

Then fate crossed his path again. His uncle died. Well, Ben Levy loved money as much as the next man, yet he was not the sort of man to rejoice at the demise of another, even if that other had been a tight-fisted uncle. But as everyone has to go sometime, and as the uncle was no youngster, nearly eighty in fact, his parting did not throw Ben into an inconsolable state of sorrow.

Again Ben inherited. This time it was money, and this created a little problem, for now Ben already had a business. So for some time after his windfall, he thought deeply and calculated incessantly. He consulted with his old friends, and in the end he came to a decision.

It was true that he was now making a living. Of course, it would have been nice if he could have made a better living. But this did not influence him in his final assessment. What really swayed him were his Saturday mornings. He missed them and yearned for them with unrelenting longing. These Saturday mornings in Shul, which he had had to give up when he went into the fruit business, determined his decision. Now that fate had shown him a way out, a way by which to retract his steps into the society that he craved for, he suddenly realized that he had sinned and that this had secretly weighed on his mind and troubled him. He thought of all those Saturdays when he had peddled his goods along the street, and the thought depressed him. Even Beckie had not shown him the old respect he had been accustomed to. And now he knew why.

There was a right and a wrong way for a Jew to live, and he had been living the wrong way ever since old Mendel had left him the horse and cart and the fruit. He was appalled!

It so happened that at that time there was a business, dealing in soft goods, that was for sale. Ben started negotiations, and within a short time, the business was his. He switched from bananas to blankets and from tomatoes to suitcases as if by magic. In the backyard, where once sacks of potatoes had been stored, empty packing cases, string and paper made their appearance, which he collected in case they'd come in handy.

Compared with his previous income from fruit, he was now doing much better and he was able to close the shop on the Sabbath. He rejoiced! Here he was, a man of reasonable means, with a wife in a new dress (out of the shop), children growing up into fine youngsters, and right back in his old place in the Shul on Saturday morning. Life was wonderful! He bought a new Tallith and a new big black Homburg hat and sat with pride and happiness as he watched the Rabbi going through the Sabbath ritual.

He took furtive glances up at the gallery where the women sat and his heart swelled with pride to see Beckie there, happy and content, among the other women. Ah! Poor uncle Simon . . . God rest his soul in peace!

And then it happened. Right from the beginning, from the first Saturday back at Shul, he suspected something. Things had changed in his absence. Things were different. Instead of talking about "Klabias", business, and all those other pleasant topics, his friends now discussed a strang thing they called "bowls". He had never heard of it. And then they explained, and he remembered. Oh sure, he had seen those "meshuggene" goyim in white trousers, there at the park. But who took notice of them?

They talked to those little round "kukels" they called bowls and a man stood at the one side shouting instructions to the men standing opposite him. They they walked back and forth pulling funny faces and waving their arms about madly after they had thrown those balls. They called that a game? "Meshugga!" Mad! Well, it was all right for them; the gentiles, but surely no Jewish fellow took much notice?

And then, he never quite knew how it happened, he himself was dressed in those long white trousers, and he and his chavers (friends) were standing on the grass they called a "green" and they were rolling up those round heavy wooden balls they called "woods", and Beckie was shouting at him when he came home.

"And you call yourself a good Jewish husband?" she screamed.

"Sure, you always said I was. What's got into you, Beckie? We've been married for . . . . ." But he knew what was in her mind before he even asked.

"And who says you wasn't . . . . then?" She said thrusting her right hand in his face.

"Look, Beckie, it's a game . . . ."

"Look nothing! Are you a little boy, to play with marbles? What next? A game! Nothing else you got to do but play games? You got responsibilities! What about me and the kids?"

"But it's . . . ." He pleaded weakly.

"It's nonsense! That's what I say. Thank God, my poor father was spared to see you, his own son-in-law dressed up like this! Like a clown! A shame! A disgrace!" she ranted on.

And Ben Levy knew somehow that he would not be able to convince her. He pulled his jacket collar up, around his neck, lit a cigarette and went to the club. There he found them all. All the old "Klabias" players were there, discussing last week's game of bowls. It was pleasant here, among the boys; a drink in one hand and an argument on the tip of your tongue why the last shot in that big game never came off.

And the seasons passed. And the children grew bigger. And he and Beckie grew older. And soon he played bowls just as well as the rest of them. And the Sundays were too few, and soon they played on Saturdays, for indeed those were the best games of all, because competitions and League were played on that day. And somehow he felt that there was trouble between him and Beckie, but it was difficult to put his finger on it. He wondered if maybe it was "the years"? Women did behave funnily sometimes. He remembered Hymie telling him about Ray . . . . Yes, it was hard to understand women! After all, wasn't he making a living, better than before? And didn't he buy her whatever she wanted? And didn't he go to Shul every Friday night and even Saturday mornings . . . when there wasn't a game at the club?

★ JEWISH GENERAL ★

Hospital: A grant of $1,000,000 (one million dollars) has been made to the Hospital for the purpose of establishing the Lady Davis Institute for Medical Research, Sam. Steinberg, president, announced at the annual meeting.

Lady Davis was the wife of Sir Mortimer B. Davis, Montreal industrialist and philanthropist. The grant was made on the initiative of Bernard Bloomfield, president, and Louis M. Bloomfield, Q.C., one of the directors of the Eldee Foundation; and through the interest of Dr. William Addleman, a member of the staff. "Creation of the Institute," Mr. Steinberg said, "has far-reaching implications for our Hospital, which is committed to standards of excellence in all fields of endeavour. It will be a lasting monument to a distinguished lady and will remain as a permanent symbol of the generous impulses of friends." Mr. Steinberg also announced another grant of $750,000 from a private source for the building of an Institute For Family And Social Psychiatry. The Hospital's Department of Psychiatry is recognized as one of the outstanding treatment and training centres in North America, he said. This new facility will enable Dr. Nathan B. Epstein, psychiatrist-in-chief, to expand activities. Mr. Steinberg said he was making the president's report because of the tragic accidental death in March of Julius Block, former president, and Mrs. Block (Dorothy). Mr. Steinberg paid tribute to Mr. Block for his enthusiasm, unselfish planning, and work for the advancement of the Hospital, and to Mrs. Block for her devotion and unusual capacity for leadership, and lasting contributions to the Women's Auxiliary of which she was honorary president; to the Hospital, and the community. As a permanent memorial, the amphitheatre in the wing now under construction will be dedicated as the Dorothy and Julius Block Amphitheatre, which will be the focal point of the Hospital's expanded teaching programs. The current construction program, due for completion in 1968 and made possible by increased grants from the Provincial government, together with Federal funds and generous subscriptions from the public, will add 50 per cent to the Hospital's bed capacity and other much-needed facilities, and give relief to all Hospital services which have been utilized to an extent far beyond their intended capacity for the past few years. During 1965 admissions again set a record, totalling 12,919. This was made possible by utilizing waiting rooms, sun-rooms, and other non-patient areas for the accommodation of beds. Infants born totalled 1,854, which was 11 less than in 1954. There were no maternal deaths. Patients days rose 14.8 per cent over 1964 to 148,936, the average stay being 11.5 days. Of these patients 50 per cent were Jewish; 19 per cent Roman Catholic; 11 per cent Protestant; and 10 per cent, other religions. Out-patient visits totalled 72,832, a slight decrease, but emergency visits totalling 20,741 were up almost 20 per cent from 1964. Samuel S. Cohen, executive director, noted that 1965 marked the completion of five years' operation of the Quebec Hospital Insurance Service. This was generally agreed to have been a great social advance, having removed the sometimes crushing financial burden of hospitalization costs from every resident of the province. It had solved some hospital problems but had created others, notably by increasing the demand for and utilization of all hospital services, with consequent financial problems due to delayed year-end financial settlements. He hoped for a strengthening of understanding between the hospitals and the insurance service to produce satisfactory solutions to outstanding problems. Maxwell Cummings, honorary treasurer, reported that operating expenditures had increased from $6,381,189 in 1964 to $7,301,220 in 1965. Operating deficit for the year was $962,668 as compared with $892,523 in 1964. Grants from the Combined Jewish Appeal, the Women's Auxiliary and other sources totalled $505,275. The Endowment Fund had been increased during the year by $69,000 and now stands at $1,129,000.

The convention at Fallsburg, New York had over eight hundred (800) teenage delegates, representing more than three hundred (300) Orthodox Jewish congregations in the U.S. and Canada, and was the largest meeting of Orthodox synagogue youth ever to convene in North America.

★ MONTREAL HAKOAH SOCCER CLUB

Continued their winning streak, by beating Ukrainia B, by a score of 2-1, at Kent Park, Ukrainia scored the first goal, at the eight-minute mark, but Hakoah came back four minutes later, and Sylvan Assouline put the ball into the net. There was close checking throughout the rest of the game, and Hakoah were lucky enough to be awarded a penalty kick. This was taken by Jack Boaz, who had the tie-breaking goal, at the forty-four-minute mark. Eddy Birenzweig and Jack Boaz will represent the team, trying out for the Quebec All-Star team, fighting in the late summer for the Canadian Championship Trophy, and a chance to represent Canada in both Pan American and Olympic Games. The next home game for Hakoah will be at Kent Park, on Thursday, July 7, at 8.30 p.m.

JEWISH FUNERAL SERVICES OF DISTINCTION

What is the A. B. C. or Audit Bureau of Circulations, and what is its importance?

A. The A. B. C. is a voluntary association of major publishers, advertisers, national and local; and advertising agencies, working together to police circulation claims, and to translate them into facts.

Q. Why are circulation facts so important?
A. Circulation figures are the only honest basis on which print advertising is sold and purchased. Publishers base their prices for advertising on the amount of their circulation, and its quality. An advertiser buys circulation. A. B. C. circulation facts tell him the exact amount at any time.

Q. How does an advertiser know that this is really so?
A. A. B. C. publishers keep exact records of all circulation receipts for subscriptions and single copy sales. These can tell him, too, whether the circulation is sold without a premium, or with one, to induce payment; or whether the circulation is composed of membership in an organization; or whether it is sold on its merit alone. Was the subscription sold on a special rate? Was it paid by mail directly to the publisher, or to an agent? These are just some of the categories of subscription payments which are recorded.

Q. Why are some of these answers so important?
A. Sometimes these answers can tell an advertiser whether the subscriber needs to be coaxed into continuing, or starting. Are subscribers voluntarily buying the publication? Do they need a cut-rate or an added attraction to keep on?

Q. How are the figures checked?
A. The publisher checks his figures, and reports them twice a year to the head office of the A. B. C. These are audited once a year by travelling A. B. C. auditors, who check the names, the receipts, the printing invoices, the bank deposits, the paper used, the ink used, the postage receipts — all of these show the number of copies printed or mailed; and paid for. If an A. B. C. field auditor goes to work for a publication whose books he has audited within a year or so, there is an automatic re-audit by another auditor. An auditor does not audit the figures of any publication for more than two consecutive years.

Q. Does the A.B.C. allow past-due subscriptions?
A. The A. B. C. rules state that all subscriptions up for renewal must be paid within three months of the expiry date. The publisher must keep track of each one. These are considered paid, but not completely so, until paid in full, for the term to come.

Q. Are new subscriptions considered as paid?
A. Not until payment is received for the term in advance.

Q. What does this cost the publisher?
A. The publisher considers the membership as his investment to protect the investment of each advertiser. The publisher pays quarterly dues; the cost of the auditing done in his office, by the hour; and the cost of checking done further, at the A. B. C. head office. If further checking is needed, the publisher pays that cost, too. An auditor spends several days in the Canadian Jewish Review office each year.

Q. Are these the only costs?
A. The greatest cost to the publisher is to see that the records are kept in order and up to date. The Canadian Jewish Review addressograph plates are posted to show the date and method and amount of payment; and the date of the subscription, and the length of its term. A publication must carry on the address label all information that the auditor would need to guide him in checking. A publication which sells subscriptions on short-term, or with a premium, or in combination with other publications, for instance, will carry all that information and more, on the address label, coded in some way.

Q. What do A.B.C. reports and statements say about the Canadian Jewish Review?
A. They tell at a quick glance the provincial breakdown; the amount sold in a period; that the Canadian Jewish Review never sells a subscription on a premium; never with a cut rate; never jointly with another publication; never as part of membership in an organization.

The Canadian Jewish Review is sold on its own merits, and always has been. It has no affiliation with any organization.

A. B. C. reports and statements supply facts to advertisers. These facts need to be known for advertising money to be spent wisely and honestly.

A. B. C. publications can never guarantee results. They do guarantee rea.

The Canadian Jewish Review is in its 23rd year of supplying facts to advertisers, investing to [illegible] investments.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only publication reaching the general Jewish community in Canada, which can provide audited, paid, A. B. C. circulation facts and figures for the protection of such advertiser.

RESORTS — NEW YORK

At Kutsher's, the night life is as big as you want it to be.

At Kutsher's, you can dance all night long to 4 bands. Cry all night long with singers of sad songs (why is love so sad?). Laugh all night long at some of the world's funniest comedians. Or sit at the bar with a friend all night long and make friends with our chief bartender. (He's very easy to make friends with – after which, he pours drinks like you were his personal guest... he's gotta go.) And you can do all this at 2 nightclubs. So if you and your wife have a fight, you can tell each other where to go. (To the other night club.) Of course we've got dozens of daytime sports and activities not to mention our 18 hole championship golf course. But you're tired, now, aren't you? You've been up all night carousing ...You're sleepy... wake up Lenny... Lenny, wake up... It's time for dinner... Lenny... Lenny...

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR'S REPORT TO FIRST ANNUAL MEETING OF ALLIED JEWISH COMMUNITY SERVICES OF MONTREAL

BY ALVIN BRONSTEIN

At an annual meeting it is customary to look back over the previous year, but it is inevitable that in the process one also looks forward. First I'll take that look ahead and I see that next year, 1967, will be the 50th anniversary of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of Montreal, an observance of which we can all be proud, because it was the forerunner of all such movements throughout Canada.

It will also be the year of the Canadian Confederation Centennial, another celebration in which we will be proud to participate. 1967 will be significant as the year of Expo, and its theme, "Man And His World", has great relevance for us. 1967 for me will be a personal anniversary, thirty years in the field of Jewish social service, a record of which I am very proud since I have felt honoured and privileged to be a part of a movement which has sought the welfare of our own people and at the same time has made enduring contributions to the improvement of the lot of all mankind.

In these years of work on behalf of Jewish communities, I cannot remember a year such as this past one where there were so many challenges to be faced and so much to be done. This has been a year of very hard work not only for me but especially for AJCS officers, executive committee, standing committees, board and staff.

I cannot say enough in appreciation of the devotion displayed by our president, Jacob M. Lowy, by Gordon Brown, chairman of the executive committee, their fellow officers, and all lay leaders who have shown unusual understanding and have intensified their activity to get the Allied Jewish Community Services off the ground in the first year. I must express deep gratitude to a dedicated and loyal staff for whom this year was also difficult since it was a year of transition, of charting new courses, and of staff shortages, so that all had to share in an increased load.

Each member of the staff voluntarily took on additional responsibilities so that necessary work could be done. I wish I could name and thank each staff member personally but in the interest of time I am going to ask all members of staff to rise so they can receive your commendation and mine. I want to thank, too, all those, lay and professional leaders of agencies, whose cooperation helped to launch Allied Jewish Community Services and whose future cooperation will assure the effectiveness of AJCS planning and coordination.

As difficult as our first year has been, we must resolve to redouble our efforts in meeting the challenges still ahead.

The rounding out of our organization, the improvement of campaign efforts, refinement of budgetary practices, and particularly an intensification of planning and research efforts will require prodigious energies. Improvement of our fund-raising is basic to our being able to maintain the level of support required by expanding needs locally, nationally, and overseas. Improvement of budgeting will help to assure that funds raised are being used in the wisest possible manner.

Important as these two foregoing activities are, the real test of Allied Jewish Community Services will come in its ability to do the soundest, most effective job possible in the planning areas. Mr. Lowy's annual report has suggested the areas where we need to concentrate:

Planning of institutional and non-institutional services for the aged; planning for a comprehensive program of services for the youth of our community; planning for effective coordination of health services; planning for the best use of our cultural, group work, recreational and campaign services; planning to determine our role as a central Jewish community organization in Jewish education; and planning to determine our proper role in the services being developed through governmental programs, so that we may contribute our skills and knowledge in the shaping of such programs and can coordinate our services with those of government as the need arises.

Planning also implies a deep concern with directions and the future responsibilities of our Jewish community; it implies a deep concern with the survival of Jewish values and identity in a period when an open society encourages acculturation.

We have gone far in the 49 years of history of our central Jewish organization, but we have much further to go. We have great contributions yet to make to the strength, to the welfare of our people, and of the entire population. We can make these contributions through ever-growing unity within our own community and through our resolve to work together in applying our accumulated understanding and knowledge in a coordinated way in the attack on social injustices.

There are some who claim that we tend to isolate ourselves too much in what we do. Nothing could be further from the truth.

In achieving the many miracles of human service for which we have been responsible, we not only help our own but help show the way for a better life for the entire community. We can best make our contributions to society as a whole if we are a strong, unified community offering what is our unique Jewish contribution.

We derive our commitment to total community welfare from a distinct and proud heritage which we preserve by adapting it to changing needs and conditions, always being sure that the basic ethical tradition is preserved. There are many among us who say that we face a grave problem, that of losing our identity as Jews, or of "seeing that identity so watered down that we begin to forget who we are and whence we came."

Working together with all of the forces of the community in which we live does not mean the loss of group character if we maintain a strong central structure within our community for planning, financing, and budgeting of Jewish community services. In this way, we can be sure we will not allow our heritage to be dissipated. Our true test as an organization will not be in concealing, but in affirming our origin and the contributions to society which flow from it.

We will show strength in our difference, not just to be different from others, but as our special contribution to the richness of our entire community and country. We have an obligation to make our contribution to the larger society but we also have an obligation to make it in our own way. I would predict that our direction in making our specific contributions will be not in becoming less Jewish, but on the contrary, in reaffirming our heritage, and in strengthening our identity and values.

Ahead of us lies our unceasing and unrelenting search for new forms of cooperation to replace presently competing efforts and to bring all divisions of our Jewish community ever closer together. This united approach will call for the greatest efforts of all. It will be difficult, as it has been difficult in the past; of this much we can be assured, that it will offer the most effective way to study emerging needs, to set priorities of services and to mobilize the necessary leadership and resources.

In our Federation and Combined Jewish Appeal we had a solid foundation on which to build. In this first year of AJCS we have added significantly to the structure. The next years ahead will, I am sure, witness the completion in AJCS of a solid and enduring community structure which will allow us to move forward in meeting our own needs and in working with others to make our total community in which all will have an opportunity to live in dignity, security, and self-fulfilment.

THE REGULAR SUNDAY RIOT

By Scott Young, of the Toronto Globe and Mail

The most noticeable group to me in the regular Sunday afternoon riot at Allan Gardens yesterday was one I've scarcely heard mentioned before: the toughs. They looked as if they came to fight. They also looked organized, with leaders and thinkers as well as infantry. And no matter how tall they were or what the color of their hair, they had this in common: wide shoulders, flat stomachs, hips exceedingly slim. They all wore open-necked shirts with the short sleeves turned up high to reveal bulging biceps. Also, they knew the Nazis — right down to the last slender and scared anonymous one who was bundled into a taxi by a cop.

Four young men beside me leaped at this taxi and opened the door as it began to move.

"Why don't you come out, you bastard!" they called at him, and other endearments, while one, half-laughing, told the driver: "Take him to my house, and we'll be right over."

I also had seen them in dozens a few minutes before, turning among the police horses during the regular 2 p.m. cavalry charge. The mounted cops rode solidly westward out of the park driving the crowd before them. As I was on Jarvis Street I could not see much of what happened as the charge approached. The crowd, tightly packed, was moving in front of the horses and the police were using restraint.

But once the first of the crowd crossed the sidewalk just at the south corner of St. Andrew's Lutheran Church, there was suddenly room for action. Traffic was stopped. One of the toughs kicked at one of the horses, clapping its rump and shoving, and the cop on the horse behind dug his heels in and moved. A girl and her fellow ran scared for the shelter of the church. Others ran in all directions. As the horses wheeled and plunged two men were thrown hard against one small tree planted on the narrow boulevard. One flew horizontally two feet off the ground to hit the tree's steel support with the middle of his back. His look as he hit was horror and fright and anger.

I have seen hockey players hit a goalpost like that and be carried off, and this man must have been hurt but as soon as he hit the ground he was rolling for dear life, reaching his feet, running.

While all this had been going on, three cops were jamming shut the back door of a paddy wagon on the east side of Jarvis, pointed north. It took off with the three policemen hanging on to the back door. It had been this — the removal of the most hated among the local Nazis — that had brought the action to Jarvis Street.

Once they had gone, it was almost over. Within minutes, the cavalry moved off south through the park in twos. Old frail men with anti-Nazi signs headed for streetcar stops. The white-helmeted foot police crossed at the Carlton Street light and then walked south on Jarvis to where police cars and buses were parked beside the Westmorland Hotel. Many plain clothes policemen (each as obvious as if he were wearing a scarlet stripe on his trousers) gathered in groups in the park and spoke of home, the backyard, a rum and coke in the sunshine.

Some of the horses were packed double into small horse-vans and towed away. The higher police officers walked down to their Plymouths parked on Jarvis and nearby streets and they left, too. Some to write reports which by now are becoming rather institutionalized. The police have the regular Sunday riot well-taped. They acted, as far as I could see, with admirable absence of anger. White faced, some of them; strained, others; but acting with restraint.

The toughs were a little less businesslike, but only a little. As the main army of police were leaving, the toughs left, too. Although their shoulders and muscles did not shrink any, their truculent manner did. "Anybody want a lift home?" one said, and that group moved off, like men at the end of a ball game.

JUSTICE COHEN'S MARRIAGE

The Congress Bi-Weekly says:

A Justice of the supreme court of Israel married an Israeli woman in New York. The reason they married here is that they could not lawfully marry in Israel, and the reason for that is that the woman was a divorcée and the Justice's name was Cohen.

There would have been no problem if his name were Abramowitz or Levine, but since it is Cohen he is presumably a kohen or member of the priestly tribe and therefore, though personally not observant, barred by Halachah, or Jewish religious law, from marrying a divorcée. Since no rabbi in Israel could marry the couple, and since there is no civil marriage there they had to come to the United States to be married.

Whether the marriage will be recognized as valid in Israel is a question which will have to be answered by the Israeli courts, and ultimately perhaps by the very court of which Justice Cohen is a member. Nor do we have competence to pass on the Halachic issues involved. (It has been asserted that since the woman remarried after her divorce and her second husband has since died, she was technically an eligible widow rather than an ineligible divorcée when she married Justice Cohen.)

This question will have to be decided, if not already done so, by the Chief Rabbinate in Jerusalem. But we do have the right to comment on the broader issue underlying this incident.

Indeed, we have more than a right; we have a duty to do so. If we attack the denial of religious liberty to Jews in the Soviet Union, how can we be silent when Jews in Israel are denied religious liberty?

To Justice Cohen and his bride at least, freedom to marry in accordance with one's conscience is no less precious than freedom to eat matzohs on Passover. Consistency might require that some of the pickets marching in front of the Soviet embassy in New York be detached for service in front of the Israel embassy.

Israel is proud of being the most if not the only democratic state in the Middle East. Jews throughout the world share in that pride. But the credibility of the claim to democracy is seriously impaired by events such as this one. Separation of religion and state is long overdue in Israel; there is no room for a theocracy, even a partial one, in any society with pretentions to democracy.

STATEMENTS OF JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS ON KING FAISAL'S FAUX PAS WITH REGARD TO JEWS AND ZIONISTS

Jacques Torczyner, president of the Zionist Organization of America, says:

We deplore the attack by King Faisal of Saudi Arabia on Jews and Zionists while the guest of the United States among whose citizens are over five and one half million Jews loyal to the United States and including many prominent in all ranks of leadership.

We recognize the courtesies and hospitality accorded Faisal by our government as the fundamental rights to a visiting sovereign of a state. Despite the many infringements by Saudi Arabia on the rights of U.S. citizens who might be employed by business firms or members of the United States Armed Forces barred from Saudi Arabia, it was to be expected that the royal visitor might also have been aware of his responsibilities as a guest to refrain from attacking the Jewish citizens of his host country.

President Nasser of the United Arab Republic, who is the chief enemy of the State of Israel, is locked in a deadly conflict with King Faisal of Saudi Arabia and King Hussein of Jordan. Indeed, only a week ago, Nasser labelled Hussein and Faisal as "reactionaries." It is against this background that we must read King Faisal's attack on Jews and Zionists in Washington on June 22. Faisal was obviously maneuvering tactically to preserve his own throne and possibly his very life against Nasser's threats.

Dr. Max Nussbaum, chairman of the American Zionist Council of all Zionist organizations in the U.S., says:

The remarks of the King from Saudi Arabia come with ill grace from a visiting monarch who is being given the hospitality of our country and our city.

If King Faisal wishes to consider the Zionists to be the enemies of his country, that is his privilege. But he should know that the overwhelming number of American citizens, both Jews and non-Jews, as well as the Government of the United States, have given decisive support in the creation of Israel and applaud the efforts of that small country in the Middle East to develop a democratic society which will become a boon to the entire area, for the benefit of Jew and Arab alike.

Dr. Joachim Prinz, chairman of the Commission on International Affairs of the American Jewish Congress, says:

The American Jewish Congress heartily commends Mayor Lindsay for cancelling the city's official dinner for King Faisal of Saudi Arabia.

In his own country, King Faisal is an absolute monarch. He prohibits Christian religious services. He bars Jews from setting foot on Saudi Arabian soil, a prohibition that was in effect long before the establishment of the State of Israel in 1948.

But when he visits these shores King Faisal dare not insult American Jewish citizens who are his hosts by calling them his enemies because they support Israel. It is also the policy of the Johnson Administration to support Israel. Does King Faisal consider the President of the United States to be his enemy as well?

Americans of many faiths abhor the Arab ruler's attitude towards Israel and those who are its friends. All New Yorkers will applaud Mayor Lindsay for his forthright repudiation of a foreign despot who has abused the hospitality and the patience of the great city of New York.

The American Jewish Committee issued this statement:

We deplore King Faisal's having taken the occasion of a state visit to our country to support the Arab boycott of Americans engaged in business dealings in Israel. In so doing, he is approving a practice that has specifically been denounced by his hosts, the United States Government. The King is no doubt aware that the Congress, in a law enacted just a year ago, reaffirmed that it is the policy of the United States "to oppose restrictive trade practices or boycotts fostered or imposed by foreign countries against other countries friendly to the United States," and that this legislation was prompted by widespread American disapproval of the Arab boycott. Further, American companies are specifically encouraged by our Government to refuse to comply with any requests for information or the signing of any undertakings that would support such boycotts.
